Nervousness Caused by Trying to Break Record Only Thing That Can Stop Giants Now.

HE Giante have already performed the impossible of a weeks ago, and there is no doubt that they will be go on and crack that ancient scord of twenty straight games Every game they have won in Boston showed that McGraw's men are not to be stopped. Even old Hard Luck himself is sidestepping their

If the Giants had been scoring fluky wins-getting turns of luck that brought the winning runs home—it would be an entirely different ma*er. But luck has had nothing to do with it. They have won by hard, consistent pounding of the ball and daring work on the bases. Nothing can stop a team that slugs all pitchers alike.

The only possible risk of a breakdown in the next three games lies in the natural nervousness connected with trying to break a record, and knowing that one slip will spoil the effort even in the last drive.

A great thing in favor of the Giants is that they have not been forced to play any game to a desperate finish. Once they were nearly nipped, and they jammed over a bunch of runs in the last inning without any trouble. But they haven't had to come up from behind. They've always had plenty in reserve. the Giants had been scoring

FRANK KRAMER, the cycle champion, is one of the most re-markable athletes in the world. markable athletes in the world. For several years people have been looking for signs of departing speed and skill in Kramer, but he comes out and wins championships as easily as he did fifteen years ago. I don't remember any other athlete, specializing in an event that demanded a hard sprint—a world of finishing speed—who lasted among the top notchers near as long as Kramer.
